When your patient is pregnant it can be hard to decide on the best therapy option, because so little is known about the impact on the unborn child. This e-grandround presents the latest evidence from an international long-term study of children exposed to cancer treatments before birth. It gives some useful information about online patient resources and invites oncologists to join the effort to build the evidence base.

You can read the full article in Cancer World.